Themes Google has a free program they offer called “Free Themes for Google Chrome”. If you download these you will have a bunch of themes on your desktop that can replace the default theme. The site itself is free, but they pay the developers who write the themes to create them. Themes are very powerful in how they affect your browsing experience; like the CSS

they are written in, themes themselves can be created in a lot of different ways. If you are already a web designer you should already know a lot about what makes a good theme. If you are not already a web designer then I recommend that you check out the best sites for learning web design as there are a lot of resources out there. Have fun browsing through the site and find a few themes that you like. Try out the themes that are similar to the themes you like. Themes that are similar to your current theme will give you a better experience because they will be easier to customize. The site is also very simple to use: Click on the theme that you want to add to Chrome Click the “Download” button Add a blank new profile for your Google Chrome browser Click on the theme that you just downloaded Click on the “Install” button and the process will begin Once the theme has been installed, you will notice that your theme has been added to the shortcut you can find on your desktop. If you ever want to remove a theme that you installed you can follow the instructions on the theme developer's site. To learn more about installing themes check out the Google Chrome official website. You can also find a lot of CSS resources that you can customize to your needs. By using CSS you can add some of these powerful tools to your own site. Again the best place to learn CSS is a place that teaches you how to use it as one is the best way to learn how to use it. CSS is a good skill to learn and you should have a basic understanding of what it is by the time you're done reading. Rude Boy "Rude Boy" is a song by the German band, Scooter, released in 1995 from their second album Funkorama. Released as a single, it became one of the band's best-selling singles. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to methods for producing safflower (Carthamus tinctorius) in steam flasks, and in particular to a method for producing safflower seed oil at a higher level of productivity in steam-flask cultivation. 2. Description of the Prior Art Safflower (Carthamus tinctorius L.) has been made to yield a high level of productivity in steam-flask cultivation. There are a number of problems, however, involved in the production of safflower seed oil at a high level of productivity under the conditions of steam-flask cultivation. Considerable difficulties are involved in the control of the color of safflower oil. In general, the colors of seed oil are differentiated into bitter oil and sweet oil on the basis of the n-fatty acid composition. It has been found that the bitter oil has a longer chain of C.sub.24 n-fatty acid and a higher level of unsaturated fatty acids, while the sweet oil has a short chain of C.sub.20 n-fatty acid and a low level of unsaturated fatty acids. The seed oil produced by steam-flask cultivation is a mixture of bitter oil and sweet oil. In spite of the difference in the level of unsaturated fatty acids, however, the bitter oil and the sweet oil are simultaneously contained in the produced seed oil in amounts almost proportional to the individual amount of each fatty acid. There are several reasons for this. The bitter oil and the sweet oil are contained in the seed oil from a common source, namely, the seed material obtained by steam-flask cultivation. Therefore, they are simultaneously present in the mixture of bitter oil and sweet oil. Also, the bitter oil and the sweet oil are produced from the same carotene and, therefore, differ in concentration solely by the different molecular length of the constituent fatty acids. There are also structural differences in triglyceride (TG) molecules of the bitter oil and the sweet oil. The bitter oil contains relatively large polar molecules derived from a carotene component, while the sweet oil contains smaller polar molecules derived from a tocopherol component. As mentioned above, it is difficult to separate the bitter oil and the sweet oil from each other by the technique of fractionation of the produced seed oil. That is, a relatively large quantity of bitter oil and a relatively small quantity of sweet oil are simultaneously produced from the mixture of bitter oil and sweet oil in
