Google Drive is very much necessary and extremely convenient for the modern age; users can use it to store data and keep it as safe and secure as possible. Using Google Drive, users can also share the data with others, at the same time keeping it accessible from anywhere. What happens when users wish to separate their important data from their files with Google Drive? The best way to do so is to create a separate folder and migrate the data there. Having the ability to work with files located inside Google Drive and Google Docs can not only increase workflow efficiency, but can also speed up the transfer process. For that reason, one would need a tool that can help in moving data, either to Google Drive or to Google Docs. For those who want to replicate the process within Windows or Mac OS, they can head on to Okdo Document Converter. The app offers a collection of tools that can assist users in converting files from Google Drive or Google Docs to various file formats. Users can either download the entire collection, which comes in a single.exe file or, add individual ones. The app's features begin with a batch processing interface. This lets users select multiple files at once and set several options, including file type, watermarking, as well as quality. Upon clicking the Start button, the conversion process will begin immediately, allowing users to see the progress of the entire transfer. If users wish to start converting to Google Drive, they must insert it as the input data. As for the output format, Okdo Document Converter will offer several file types. Google Drive supports only its own PDF format; however, if users wish to export to Google Docs, they can opt for another one. For users to get from the PDF format to Microsoft Word, users must insert.docx. As for compatibility, the app can convert any file format to PDF. What users need to know is that they will need to convert the file format the same, during the conversion process. When it comes to moving data from Google Drive to Google Docs, the process is not limited to only exporting to PDF. Users can expect to be able to use the app to convert their files to Microsoft Word, Excel, DOC, or any format they prefer.
