Sometimes the term "digital film" is used to describe what most folks would simply call a digital photo. This may seem confusing, but it's true. Adobe Photoshop captures and retains all the details of a film negative that you print on paper (see Figure 2-13). It also works fine with digital negatives on your computer. However, when you print a digital photo, it's a good idea to make sure it has a good file size before printing. Photoshop Elements is a less powerful version of the program. It has fewer features but does have some great features of its own. I'd recommend starting with it if you're just getting into Photoshop or if you're on a budget. Figure 2-13: Photoshop captures the filmlike tones of a negative. TIFF This file format is for images that are raster-based in nature. TIFF (Tagged Image File Format) is a standard that's part of the International Color Consortium (ICC). An ICC profile is a file that helps convert between different color spaces. RAW This file format is for images that are RAW (raw digital image). RAWs record the full range of color reproduction. The RAW image format is considered the most accurate and is recommended for photographers looking for the most accurate reproduction. JPEG It's become the most common digital image format for the Web, but this is the file format that I don't recommend. The reason being that it's usually too big for your typical Web image. Most people downsize and compress JPEG images because they're concerned about bandwidth and don't want to pay for a lot of unused space. Other image formats include GIF and BMP, which will be discussed in the "GIF" section, "Advantages of GIF" section, and "BMP" section. Image Editing: Different Types of Editing Photoshop has multiple options for performing different types of editing. It has most of the basic tools for any type of photo image editing, as shown in Figure 2-14, from left to right: The Type tool enables you to set up text that's displayed just like a typewriter. Image > Type, on the other hand, enables you to create your own fonts for whatever type of text you want. The Magic Wand tool allows you to select areas of the image based on color or tone, and the Easy Selection tool enables you to quickly select an area of an image.

Q: mod_rewrite and dynamic urls, is it possible I have a dynamic url like /my-application/page.php?id=12345 and I would like this url to become /my-application/page/12345 I would like to use the id in the url and get rid of the page part of the url. I've been trying the following things, but they don't work. 1) First I tried it using a.htaccess file RewriteEngine On RewriteRule ^([^\/])$ page.php?id=$1 [L] The problem is that this is not working. Instead I get a 404 error 2) Then I tried it with a front controller like this: RewriteEngine On RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-f RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-d RewriteRule ^page/([^\/])$ page.php?id=$1 [L] But this isn't working either. Could anyone please explain how to do this? Thanks. A: You cannot use rewrites here, instead, do the following: RewriteEngine On RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-f RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-d RewriteRule ^page/([^\/*]+)/?$ page.php?id=$1 [L] The above rule will convert /page/12345 to /page.php?id=12345. However, you must be careful to avoid infinite redirects. Your browser does not support iframes. Johnny Mercer, who has died of congestive heart failure at the age of 88, had perhaps more of an impact as a songwriter and a producer of other people's music than he did as a recording star in his own right. With words and melodies more powerful than most of his contemporaries, he wrote and performed with the likes of Duke Ellington, Frank Sinatra and Barbra Streisand. He also turned out a string of hit ballads on his own. "If I'm any part of your life, somehow you're part of me, you're part of my heart,◆"
