Determinants of lower limb joint kinematics. There is a large body of data on the influence of varus/valgus alignment of lower limb joints on static joint moments during stair descent. The aim of this review is to assess evidence for and implications of the influence of other bone and soft-tissue properties, including muscle strength and knee pain, on joint kinematics during gait and stair ascent/descent. Fifteen studies were reviewed. There is no clear, consistent evidence that varus/valgus alignment of lower limb joints influences joint moments during gait. Of studies on stair descent, only one provides evidence that varus/valgus alignments influence lower limb joint kinematics. This contrasts with evidence that tibiofemoral alignment, including both varus/valgus alignment and lateral tibial slope, influence lower limb joint kinematics during stair descent. The limited number of studies and inconsistencies in results may be explained by methodological constraints, including small sample sizes, and further research is needed.
