This article highlights a few. Just click to expand. 1) New Photoshop classes – Photoshop’s major new feature is a set of new classes that bring Photoshop’s professional-grade features to the C++ programming language for developers. These classes are the foundation for new interactive features in upcoming versions of Photoshop. The new classes bring new and updated Photoshop features to C++, including: a vector layer class that now maintains the new vector aesthetic, instead of a vector to bitmap layer conversion, a selection state class that enables developers to maintain state across document changes, and an embeddable interface loader class (currently experimental) that enables applications to be loaded into other applications with embedded interfaces. Continuing the tradition started by Photoshop for iPad, within the next major release of the Creative Cloud desktop applications, the legacy 3D interfaces will be removed. Switching back and forth between the legacy interfaces and new environments will be supported within the applications. Although the legacy Workspace3D interfaces will be phased out for the new native APIs, the Shift Studio plug-in will continue to work in the new versions of Photoshop. New users and users transitioning from previous versions will need to register their 3D product for the new version of Photoshop before they can use it.
