It's a feature that automatically detects the special borders in the image, and then removes or moves any object outside of this border. Faces, objects, text, and patterns all have their own special border, and this feature is often relied on to bring a specific aspect of an image to the foreground or background. The main purpose of this feature is to help you to make something look better in your photo, but it still can be a lot of fun to play around with. To use this feature, open up the ⇧ 4 shortcut, and then choose Content-Aware Move from the menu. You can easily remove unwanted objects from your photos with this feature. Right now, you can create extremely precise adjustments using the Lens Blur feature in Photoshop.
